P R E F A C E .

IT is a source of constant regret with all who feel an interest in the early history of our country, that so little care has been taken to preserve the most reliable authorities on all subjects connected therewith, viz : the manuscripts written by those who lived and acted contemporary with the events which they have recorded. This seems to be more especially true in regard to Virginia than any other of the old thirteen states, for in almost all of the old counties the enquirer after these invaluable materials for history, can hear of the former existence of County Records, Vestry Books, Private Diaries, and Journals and Orderly Books, which have either been destroyed by fire, or allowed to crumble away in damp cellars or leaky garrets. A few creditable exceptions are however to be found in families, where they have been kept as heirlooms, but so far as I know only two of them relating to our State have ever been made public, with the exception of those contained in the invaluable collection of tracts published by Peter Force, Esq. In 1841 the "Westown MSS." was published by the Messrs. Ruffin, and in 1853 Miss Ann Maury, in the "Memoirs of a Huguenot Family," included the "Journal of John Fontaine."

During the time which has elapsed since the last named work was issued, the historical students of the Northern States have printed scores of documents of a similar character, each one of which has thrown some light on subjects connected with either our Colonial or Revolutionary History.

I now propose to throw in my mite to assist in this laudable work, with the hope that it may have the effect to induce others to contribute to the same. I have in my possession two other documents, a Private Diary and a Vestry Book, each one more than twice the size of this, and these will be printed as soon as sufficient leisure can be obtained to attend to them, and if their publication shall be the means of bringing out from their hiding places more of these records of the olden times, I shall be gratified with the conviction that steps have been taken in the right direction to develop the proper materials for a History of the Old Dominion.

INTRODUCTION.

WHILE it is to be regretted, that in Virginia so few such authentic Documents of History as this Orderly Book have been preserved, it is a matter of congratulation that the one now presented to the reader, has been fortunately rescued from the current of oblivion. This Orderly Book embraces the interval between the 18th of March and the 28th of August, 1776, being a little more than five months. The circumstances connected with the preservation of the manuscript are not known: it, however, fell eventually into the hands of John West, Esq., of the city of Richmond, who has obligingly allowed a transcript to be made of it, under the care of Thomas H. Wynne, Esq., whose active interest in matters appertaining to Virginia history is so well known. The handwriting of the original is good, and in so good preservation, that not a word, it is believed, from the commencement to the end, has been lost by the lapse of time. The latter portion of the book appears to have been written by a different hand, and the same reappears in some agricultural memoranda made subsequently in the blank leaves of the volume, extending from 1786 to 1811. These memoranda refer to Flatt Creek, and Grove Brook plantations, and perhaps in this way a clue may be found for identifying the person who recorded the latter part of the orders. These plantation memoranda are methodical and exact, and their close juxtaposition with the records of war, exhibit a pleasing example of the beating of the sword into the ploughshare, and the spear into the pruning-hook.

Williamsburg, where the troops were quartered, the ancient Capital of Virginia, was without trade, and owed its importance to its being the Seat of Government, and of the venerable College of William and Mary, at this time in a declining condition. The houses, mostly wooden, numbered less than a hundred. The town consisted mainly of one street, named after the Duke of Gloucester, three fourths of a mile in length, wide, level, bounded at the east end by the Capitol, and on the West by the College. Besides these, the only other buildings of note were the Octagon Magazine, from which Dunmore had in the preceding year removed the powder, the old Raleigh Tavern, the Attorney General's Residence, the Governor's Palace, and the Church. The streets were unpaved and dusty—the soil being sandy. The place was healthy, and enjoyed an advantage rare in Eastern Virginia, of being free from mosquitoes. Josiah Quincy, who visited Williamsburg in the early Spring of 1773, says: “Excellent farms and large “cleared tracts of land, well fenced and tilled, are “all around me. Peach trees seem to be of spontaneous growth in these Provinces, and I saw “them all along in the finest bloom. Whole fields

 “of them looked beautiful. I saw about six acres
 “all in high bloom, and very regularly planted,
 “every other row being trees of the apple and pear
 “kind, not yet in blossom. An extent of about “twelve or fifteen acres of peach trees, set in equidistant rows, intermixed all about with many “small pine trees of exquisite verdure, formed a “prospect to the eye most delightful and charming.”

During the year 1775, Patrick Henry had, at the head of an armed force, extorted compensation for the gunpowder removed from the Magazine; the Governor had escaped from Williamsburg, and had raised the royal standard; a predatory war had ensued, and the battle of the Great Bridge had occurred. Early in 1776 Norfolk had been reduced to ashes, the North Carolina patriots had given a prompt and decisive blow to the royalists at Moore's Creek Bridge; Col. Henry had resigned his command, Col. Andrew Lewis had been appointed Brigadier General and Commander-in-Chief of the Virginia troops. He was a native of Ireland, being a son of John Lewis, the pioneer of Augusta county. Andrew Lewis was twice wounded at Fort Neccessity, was subsequently appointed by Washington Major of his regiment during the French and Indian war, and no officer stood higher in his confidence. Major Andrew Lewis commanded the Sandy Creek Expedition of 1756, and was afterwards made prisoner at Grant's defeat. He was Commissioner for Virginia at the Treaty of Fort Stanwix in 1768. He commanded at the battle of Point Pleasant in 1774, where the celebrated warrior Cornstalk, at the head of the confederated Indians of the North West, was defeated. Col. Lewis and his troops believed that Governor Dunmore during that campaign was in collusion with the savage foe. It was reserved for General Lewis to expel the Governor from Virginia. The statue of General Lewis is to be one of the group surrounding the equestrian statue of Washington in the Capitol Square in Richmond.

Col. Thomas Bullet, of Prince William County, was Deputy Adjutant General of the Virginia forces. At the head of a company of Virginians he defended the baggage at Grant's defeat, and contributed to save the remnant of the detachment from massacre. He was the only officer who escaped unhurt on that disastrous occasion. In 1773 he and his brother Cuthbert (afterwards judge and member of the Virginia Convention of 1788) were engaged as agents of Lord Dunmore in surveying lands at the falls of the Ohio. Thomas Bullet was present at the Battle of the Great Bridge, and was first to discover the approach of the enemy. Upon their repulse, fired with patriotic ardour, he urgently advised the cautious Woodford to gratify the enthusiastic wishes of the troops, and to advance at once to storm the enemy's intrenchments.

The Virginia troops were encamped during the period of this Orderly Book at Williamsburg, and the Orders are dated either at this place or the College Camp, or Springfield, or Deep Spring, in the same vicinity. In vain does the imagination essay to realize the dangers which then overshadowed the Colony; in vain will it endeavour to reproduce the stirring scenes of the miniature Capital, whose quiet was now disturbed by the stormy music of the drum, and the thrilling blast of the revolutionary trumpet. Perhaps some Homer may yet arise to recall the shadowy forms, and make them again live and move before us. The constant and exact attention to discipline, and drill, and the morale of the army, shows how sensible the Virginians were of the magnitude of the impending danger, and of the energetic means necessary to sustain themselves in so unequal a combat. In April, General Charles Lee arrived at Williamsburg, and during his brief stay in Virginia displayed that dashing, eccentric and impetuous energy, for which he was so much distinguished. The brilliance of his genius dazzled Americans for a time, but the meteor was short-lived. He who aspired to be commander-in-chief proved eventually to be traitor.

Early in May, 1776, the Virginia Convention met at Williamsburg, and their proceedings displayed a patriotism, judgment, moderation and dignity worthy of the crisis: it was the climax in the development of the political character of Virginia. Her Delegates in Congress were instructed to propose Independence, the Declaration of Rights and the Constitution were framed amid threats of invasion and ruin, and on the 29th day of June, Virginia, by an unanimous vote, became an Independent State, and Patrick Henry was elected the first Republican Governor in America. On the ninth of July, General Lewis dislodged Lord Dunmore from Gwynn's Island. On the twenty-fifth the Declaration of Independence was proclaimed to the rejoicing troops at Williamsburg.

In 1768 he became minister of Stratton Major church in King and Queen county: in 1773 he visited the West Indies. The following extract is taken from the Williamsburg Gazette of 1771:

“WILLIAMSBURG, Jan. 17.

“On Sunday, the 25th day of November last, W^m Nelson, Esq. and his new married lady made their appearance in the Stratton Major church, King and Queen county, for the first time after marriage, when an excellent Sermon from the 24th chapter of Genesis, verse 20th, “And Jacob served seven years for Rachel and they seemed unto him but a few days for the love he had to her,” was delivered by the Rev. Mr. Dunlap. In handling the discourse the preacher in his usual animated manner touched upon the tender passion of love as a necessary requisite in courtship and marriage, the duty of husband with respect to acquiring and preserving domestic happiness, concluding with some very pertinent animadversions on the conduct of parties in regard to the disposition of children in marriage, and how far the duty between both ought to be reciprocal. The whole discourse was handled in a new and striking manner.”

The Rev. Mr. Dunlap subsequently was involved in dissension with his vestry, and appears to have been extruded by them.

After having been a Lutheran minister in New Jersey, he removed to the Valley of Virginia in 1772, and became a minister of the established church in Shenandoah county. He represented that county in the House of Burgesses and of the Convention of 1775-6. In 1775 he was appointed Colonel of the 8th Virginia regiment. He became a general and served with distinction through the war of Revolution.

 "General Lee wrote to Washington a letter dated April 5th, complimenting him on the evacuation of Boston in the following language :

"I most sincerely congratulate you, I congratulate the public, on the "great and glorious event your possession of Boston. It will be a most "bright page in the annals of America, and a most abominably black one in "those of the beldam Britain. Go on, my dear General, crown yourself "with glory, and establish the liberties and lustre of your country on a "foundation more permanent than the Capitol Rock. My situation is "just as I expected. I am afraid I shall make a shabby figure, without "any real demerits of my own. I am like a dog in a dancing school. I "know not where to turn myself, where to fix myself. The circumstances "of the country intersected by navigable rivers, the uncertainty of the "enemy's designs and motions, who can fly in an instant to any spot they "choose, with their canvas wings, throw me, and would throw Julius
 "Cæsar, into this inevitable dilemma. I may possibly be in the north
 "when, as Richard says, I should serve my sovereign in the west. I can "only act from surmise, and I have a very good chance of surmising
 "wrong. I am sorry to grate your ears with a truth, but must at all "events assure you that the Provincial Congress of New York are angels
 "of decision when compared with your countrymen, the Committee of

NOTE 15, P. 38. May 15th.

On the 15th of May, the Convention of Virginia passed resolutions, instructing their delegates in Congress to propose to that body “to declare the United Colonies free and independent States.”

Extract from Williamsburg Gazette of May 17th: “In consequence of the above resolutions, universally regarded as the only door which will lead to safety and prosperity, some gentlemen made a handsome collection for the purpose of treating the Soldiery, who next day [May 16th,] were paraded in Waller’s Grove, before Brigadier General Lewis, attended by the gentlemen of the Committee of Safety, the members of the General Convention, the inhabitants of this city, &c. &c. The resolutions being read aloud to the army, the following toasts were given, each of them accompanied by a discharge of the artillery and small arms, and the acclamations of all present :

“1. The American Independent States.

“2. The Grand Congress of the United States and their respective Legislatures.

“3. General Washington and victory to the American arms.

“The Union Flag of the American States waved upon the Capitol during the whole of this ceremony ; which being ended the Soldiers partook of the refreshments prepared for them by the affection of their countrymen, and the evening concluded with illuminations and other demonstrations of joy ; every one seeming pleased that the domination of Great Britain was now at an end, so wickedly and tyrannically exercised for these twelve or thirteen years past, notwithstanding our repeated prayers and remonstrances for redress.”
